United States Shooting Academy Announces New Division 'Protective Operations Group'

Tulsa Oklahoma, March 09, 2009 – Until recently the United States Shooting Academy™ Inc. (USSA) has specialized in firearms training for both competitive events and tactical training for civilians, law enforcement, and the military. However, with the deteriorating world-economy, people, businesses and potentially nations are increasingly at risk. Rising threat levels are threatening to endanger the lives of workers and assets both domestic and overseas. Due to these unfortunate realities the USSA has taken immediate steps to redirect some of its internal security operational resources to address head on this real and extremely capable threat. Interweaving the credibility, knowledge and expertise of highly trained and specially selected USSA staff members, who are time tested operators with years of security operations worldwide, the USSA proudly introduces, the Protective Operations Group (POG).

Chad Warren, Director of the Protective Operations Group will be heading up this new division, applying years of hands on “in the field” experience in the Middle East, Africa and Southeast Asia. Mr. Warren stated, “The POG has been created to fill the ever expanding void of security needs. We are witnessing a growing demand from individual businessmen, small to large-scale corporations, on US soil or the shores of foreign lands that require security professionals on both short and long term deployments; be it a secured motorcade from the airport, securing a fixed asset such as a corporate complex or a super tanker on the high seas. The USSA POG has the necessary skill set, training and personnel that will encompass all phases and execution of security operations, designed to specifically meet any and all client objectives for a multitude of security contingencies”.
